It is actually libelous for you to claim or imply that this is what Caroline and/or I have been or are doing. You have no basis in law, logic or ethics, other than Scientology "ethics," which is utterly unethical, to make this libelous allegation.

Your cult ripped Caroline off. Now it must pay back the money. Scientology must pay back the money even according to your own "doctrine of exchange."

A claim of fraud runs from the time the fraud was discovered. If you woke up today, Gerhard, and discovered that for 8 years, or 30 years, you'd been ripped off, day after day after day, "service" after

"service" after "service," payment after payment after payment, especially by a cult that promises that if you're merely not "satisfied" it will refund your payments, you would have a perfectly legitimate legal claim against that cult. (I am not claiming to be a lawyer, and you must make your own legal decisions.)

The Scientology cult, as directed David Miscavige, has ripped off thousands upon thousands of customers. All of them, in order to pay what was ripped off, were brainwashed. That is, they were inculcated with the idea that if they did exactly what they were told, including paying what would be ripped off, everything would be okay. That idea is the core "belief" for brainwashed Scientology customers, and largely for staff.

What would be "okay" for any customer, as part of the inculcation or brainwash, would certainly include actual receipt of what Scientology was promising in exchange for the payments. What Scientology promises would include, obviously, and by way of example, the increase in IQ per time unit of doing what the customer was told to do by the people who took his payments in exchange for such promise or promises.

Obviously not all of those customers -- often people like Caroline who paid over 60 thousand dollars, and who gave the cult over twenty years of doing exactly what she was told to do -- will become unbrainwashed, or at least will not become unbrainwashed at the same time. You might recall this datum, or dictum, or dogma, which, by the way, Hubbard did not coin (oh, what am I thinking, ka-ching!) "It takes as long as it takes."

There are some obvious, and obviously unobvious steps out of the Scientology brainwash, that is, to the point of no longer doing any of what Scientology says to do to obtain or attain anything Scientology promises. The knowledge or discovery that (again using the IQ example) one's IQ did not go up by the product of all the time units the ex-customer had spent in Scientology doing exactly what he was told to do and the reasonable expectation of measurable increase per time unit, as Hubbard measured and sold IQ gain in "scripture," might not occur for many years. You haven't had that cognition, right? And you've been doing exactly what you're told to do in Scientology for how long?

Obviously, the Miscavige cult does what it can to keep customers like yourself, and ex-customers like Caroline, from ever gaining that knowledge; here, continuing with the same example, that their IQs have not increased all those expected points by doing exactly what they'd been told to do. The Miscavigists still publish the same set of IQ-raising claims, still include Hubbard's huge gains per hour claims as "scripture," pump out ever glossier IQ boosting promo, e.g., <http://www.carolineletkeman.org/refund/docs/validity-346-insert1.html> <http://www.carolineletkeman.org/refund/docs/connect-fsm-nwsltr-2001.html> and attack the good folk who criticize the criminality and who cognite on the fraud and request their money back as never before. What Mr. Waterkamp is doing here -- one of the duties of his hat -- is to help Miscavige stop people from finding out that they have been defrauded.

This massive campaign to prevent people from discovering the fraud, which campaign includes continuing the marketing of the fraud and declaring and black PRing customers who do wake up and discover the fraud, effectively tolls the statute of limitations on this fraud.

With that gargantuan size and effort of this Scientology campaign to prevent people from waking up, one can expect that there would be a colossal and fairly sudden reaction with great numbers of customers and staff waking up, and discovering that they had been defrauded. Will you put off your waking up, Gerhard, until everyone else has woken up?

You will note that in your campaign to prevent people from waking up and discovering the fraud, you and Miscavige are too late with Caroline. She found out, and when she found out she requested her money back pursuant to your cult's policy.

There are multiple points of cognition or discovery regarding Scientology, a significant one of which is that the people doing the ordering of what the ex-customer did, exactly as ordered through all those hours, days or years, are not honest, ethical, civil rights-promoting, humanitarian people, and Scientology is not only not the most ethical organization on the planet (part of the KSW inculcation and key to the brainwash) but is a pathologically unethical organization. You're still brainwashed, Gerhard, so you still haven't woken up to just how unethical Scientology is; but that is a cognition that any customer or staffer like yourself can have at any time. For now, it is your hat to black PR people like Caroline and me in order to forward Scientology's campaign to prevent people from finding out just how unethical the cult is. Naturally, to any thinking person, your actions in attacking good people and trying to prevent people from finding out just how unethical Scientology is, demonstrate perfectly just how unethical the cult is.

> Giving you wanna be rip off artists any money would be the >unethical thing to do.

This is Miscavige logic. Attack the defrauded. Attack the defenseless. Attack the victims. Attack the SPs, because they are the defrauded, the defenseless, the victims. Don't mention the fraud.

I am not so stupid that I wouldn't know if my wife had an IQ of five hundred let alone five thousand.

Here's my web site, where many of my posts and other writings are webbed. People can see for themselves.
<http://www.gerryarmstrong.org>

Here's another web site, where people can see for themselves the "Suppressive Person" doctrine, which explains with the Scientology cult's own documents why Miscavige is such a liar, why you attack good people, why Scientology blatantly violates its own "policy" of giving refunds requested, and why the cult is just as unethical as it is <http://www.suppressiveperson.org/>

And here's Caroline's site, where people can see for themselves her claim for a refund and her efforts to obtain the refund that Scientology promises but does not deliver.
